THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1872.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Napoleon is to go to Madeira for the benefit of his health.

New Orleans papers complain of a scarcity of tonnage in that city.

"Hick" transit is an epidemic motto down East.

The French government is reported to have prohibited the issue of any new journals.

The statement comes to us from Chicago that there are twenty thousand more laborers there than they can find work for this winter.

The tobacco claimant in England to the estates of Sir Roger will appear soon again in the courts, this time as a defendant against an indictment for perjury and conspiracy.

Bret Harte is said to be an attractive and picturesque talker, though not remarkable in appearance, his face bearing no evidence of the finer fire of genius. He is not fanatical in fondness for labor.

It requires more delicacy of touch, a better acquaintance with the inner emotions of the heart, and grander pathos or sentiment to make a declaration of love than it does to put up a stove.

Worse and worse! We recorded the other day that the Herald called the horse disease the "Hipporhynchitis." That was bad enough, but now here comes the Courier des Etats Unis and says it is "L'Epiphyngorhynchitis." After this, what?

The Chinese Government has given orders that all the forms of the religion of Confucius shall be rigidly enforced among the students recently sent to this country, and that the four books of the five kings, and the sacred edict of Emperor Kanghi shall form parts of their regular lessons.

It is reported that the Western Union Telegraph Company have applied for an injunction restraining the working of all opposition lines in the United States, claiming that the operation of such lines under the present system a violation of the Page patent and improvements, which claim to be used in the Morse system.

Asst. Sec. French Communist, while on his way to the convict station, to which he had been condemned, jumped overboard from the transport, near the Cape of Good Hope, and drifted to swim ashore. He was fired upon and captured, with a broken arm added to his miseries, and the prospect of an addition to his sentence for his pains.

The Rome correspondent of the London Times says that the Pope is approaching the close of his earthly career. So potent is this fact, that foreign ministers have long since begun to send daily bulletins concerning his health to their respective governments. His brother's recent death has made a great impression on his mind, and the spirit that once held up and strengthened the decaying frame, is no longer there. His physical weakness, says the correspondent, is shown in the bent shoulders, the drooping head, the feeble gait, and above all, in the falling memory of the good old man.

It is said that a formal notice of the contest for governor in North Carolina has not yet been given, and as the Legislature convenes on the 15th instant, unless given before that time, Caldwell, Republican, will take his seat. The Democratic majority in this Legislature on joint ballot is twenty-two. The excitement of the next session centres on this election of a United States senator to succeed the Hon. John Pool. The prominent candidates are ex-Governor Zebulon Vance, Judge Morrison, the defeated candidate for governor, ex-senator Clingman, General D. M. Barringer, and others. The Republicans, it is thought, will support General Barringer.

An event of great importance in China is the marriage of the Hoang-ti, or Emperor, which has just been celebrated. This is not, however, only as marking the attainment of his majority by the young ruler, who now succeeds to the throne and begins his actual reign. During his lifetime the Emperor of China is not known by his real name, but his reign is called by some poetic title supposed to characterize that period of his history. Now that the Emperor is to be invested with supreme authority, many questions relating to foreign intercourse, kept in abeyance during the regency, will be brought forward, and the discussion of these will once become interesting to us.

Justin McCarthy writes to the New York Mail that some time ago the Countess of Shalbury, who has just died and who was a very benevolent woman, read considerable about the hard lives of the ballet girls and felt a longing to improve their condition. She resolved to have a friendly gathering of ballet girls at her own house and talk the matter over. Accordingly she commissioned a gentleman to have invitations conveyed in her name to a number of representative corymbes for an early tea at her house. The gentleman was amazed, but executed his commission. The countess had a neat little tea prepared with currant buns and marmalade, and all that sort of thing, for the fair girls with the few shilling-a-week wages, whom she expected to see in cotton gowns and shabby garments. Alas, the ladies drove up to the door in well appointed broughams, dressed in trailing silks, fluttering their lace kerchiefs and flashing their diamonds! Consternation—tableau—utter breakdown of the whole charitable scheme! It is said that the poor countess never could understand how such corymbes could support such luxury.

It means that an age of discovery is not yet past, though as far as known new investigations have to be confined to those regions where nature has thrown up strong barriers against the enterprise of man. Valuable tidings from the Polar expeditions have been made public by Dr. Augustus Petermann, of Götting. He represents that Captain Nils Johnson, of Norway, while on a fishing cruise, landed last August upon the land to the east of Spitzbergen, which was never visited except once before, and then very superficially, by Captain Aitmann, of Hammerfest. It has been placed on the maps in all directions from Spitzbergen for over two hundred years. On the 17th of August, Captain Johnson anchored off this island for the purpose of fishing and supplying himself with driftwood, of which large quantities lay piled up on the banks. He was the first to set foot on the new land, and landing to explore it, he ascended a mountain near the coast, from which he obtained an extended view over a wide expanse of territory. He thus discovered that what Captain Aitmann supposed was three distinct islands separated by broad channels, was really one, but very much indented. Only on the north coast was there any ice; in other directions the sea was entirely open. Among the most important discoveries made by Captain Johnson were the fauna and flora of these far northern lands. Birds, seals and reindeer abounded, the latter of remarkable fatness. The immense longitudinal piles of driftwood, which ran along the eastern coast, some twenty feet above the highest tidal mark, are suggestive of the current conditions of the Arctic Ocean, and also of the meteorological and other atmospheric commotions in the "icy seas."

The Election Returns.

It is not our custom ordinarily to refer to the trouble and expense which THE NEWS always cheerfully incurs whenever there is intelligence to be had of general interest to its readers. But we feel a just pride in the signal success which has crowned our efforts to give to the public full, prompt, clear and trustworthy returns of the momentous elections which took place in October and on Tuesday last. In each case our special correspondents at the several news centres were actively engaged, all through the night following the contest, in gathering and forwarding over the wires the reports as they came in from the polls. But this was but half the work. The mass of fragmentary and often contradictory dispatches would, if printed as received, only serve to puzzle and confuse, instead of enlightening the general reader. It was necessary to compare, compare, verify and analyze the multitude of telegrams, so as to sift out for public information the substance of the reports, and put it in such form that its purport could be readily understood. It was this kind of labor, supplementing a systematic and liberal use of the telegraph, that enabled THE NEWS, yesterday morning, to give in a nutshell, and with approximate accuracy, the result of the Presidential struggle in every section of this broad Union. Such a feat of enterprise and industry is a new thing in Charleston journalism, and we mention it only as a proof of our determination to keep THE NEWS at all times and in all respects in the front rank of the live newspapers of the day.

The Liberal Waterloo.

The October elections in Pennsylvania and Indiana were a fair test of the strength of the Liberal movement, and the huge Radical majority in the former State, where the efforts of the Administration were concentrated, showed that the Northern people were not ripe for anything like a political revolution. From that moment there was very little expectation that Grant would be defeated. The result of the election of Tuesday is, therefore, no startling surprise; but to the South it will seem strange that there should have been not only a collapse of Liberalism, but also, a decided reaction in favor of the present President. This is attributable to several causes, amongst which it is not wise to count any hostility of feeling towards the Southern States. It doubtless will be said that the hearty greeting which was given by the "ex-rebels" to Mr. Greeley is the main reason of his decline and fall. This is an idea which the Radical politicians have encouraged, but we cannot believe that it exerted any widespread influence. There is, in truth, neither rhyme nor reason in hearkening to the suggestions of passionate irritation. If Southerners insist on "hating the Yankee," with might and main, merely because Grant receives a majority of the electoral vote, the Southern States cannot and will not enjoy internal peace or material prosperity. It is not necessary to fall back upon the hypothesis of hate. The overthrow of Mr. Greeley is explicable and intelligible in a wholly different way.

For some time it has been evident that the capitalists of the country had no confidence in the Liberal candidates. Money is timid, and there was an unreasoning fear that Mr. Greeley might disturb the finances or allow the country to drift into the hypothesis of war. In these apprehensions THE NEWS did not share, inasmuch as it believes a bigoted bloodthirsty to be far more dangerous than a man of large brain and ripe knowledge. But the possessors of plethoric purses could not be convinced, and their influence was thrown against Greeley. The straight-out movement had no serious bearing upon the canvass. There were, however, tens of thousands who stayed at home on election day. Being confident that, whether Radical or Liberal was chosen, they would have sound and upright local governments, these could afford to indulge in political sentimentalism. In the South, on the other hand, local reform has been impossible under Radical rule, and the Conservative citizens were ready to seize any opportunity of changing the character of the Federal Government, which they justly hold responsible for the worst of the evils which afflict them. The South has voted nearly solidly for Greeley; the man who was an open foe in the days of his might, and is a generous friend in the time of his adversity. There is no force in the argument that a "straight-out" Democrat would have beaten Grant. The returns show this. It is true that the Democrats might have carried Delaware, New Jersey and Connecticut, but they would have had little prospect of success in New York, where the unfortunate nomination of Mr. Kernan, for Governor, was a load that they could not stand.

The News has still an abiding faith in the principles of which the Liberal movement was the exponent. Changes may take place in party names and in the plan of political battle, but the fundamental truths contained in the Cincinnati-Baltimore platform must sooner or later prevail, for by them alone can the people of the United States secure and retain the blessings which flow from domestic tranquillity, solid progress, and just and honest government.

New Books.

THE DOVE IN THE EAGLE'S NEST. By the Author of "The Heir of Redcliffe." New York: D. Appleton & Co. Charleston: Holmes' Book House. The grace and purity of Miss Yonge's style are well known, but they were never more happily conspicuous than in this charming romance. It has the attractiveness which always attaches to stories of belted-knight, of "lady faire," and burgher bold, and without being the least bit "goody," it teaches the soundest lessons of fortitude, self-denial and self-control. Would that more of tawdry sentiment were written in these days of tawdry sentiment and sham chivalry. The Dove in the Eagle's Nest is cordially commended to the Southern public.

Cloth, pp. 339. Price $1.00.

FAUSTINA: A Novel. Translated from the German by Ida, Countess Hahn-Hahn. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co. Charleston: Holmes' Book House.

The translator doubts whether a cordial welcome will be given to Faustina in "this country of conventionalism." It is thought that "the man of the world will sneer, the 'matron' will gravely shake her head, 'prude' will thank Heaven she is no acquaintance of hers." And well they may. This Faustina, "erring child of light," betrays her husband, lives with a gipsy lover as long as it suits her, leads a new and more ardent flame, and dies in a convent in the odor of sanctity. It may be imagined the ingenious metaphysical, theological and psychological speculations in which the fair Faustina and her friends indulge do not in any way, atone for the inherent immorality of the story. However, the translator coolly says that we must take Faustina "not as an example, but as a 'warning.'" No more of Hahn-Hahn, 'an' it "please you."

Cloth, pp. 298. Price $1.50.
